

Commitment to the CPLJ Project (Correspondents)

(1) I commit myself to collaborating as a correspondent with the Max Planck Institute Luxembourg's Project "Comparative Procedural Law and Justice" (hereafter, CPLJ), which is financially supported by the Luxembourg National Research Fund (FNR – O19/13946847). I have due knowledge of the CPLJ Project Description.

(2) My collaboration with the CPLJ Project will entail: (i) Recognition as CPLJ correspondent in all the project-related activities; (ii) Opportunity to discuss and comment on the work-in-progress activities of the CPLJ Project; (iii) Access to the CPLJ Online Collaborative Platform; (iv) Possibility to attend all CPLJ conferences (although, unfortunately, travel and accommodation costs cannot be covered due to budgetary limitations); (v) Support and assistance by the Editorial Board, the Scientific Advisory Board and the MPI team in all CPLJ activities.

(3) Should I ever produce any supporting material for the CPLJ project (reports, summaries, videos, etc.), my authorship and intellectual property rights will be duly respected, in accordance with common practice within the academic community.

In principle, I will not be writing any chapter or subchapter for the Compendium on Comparative Procedural Law. However, upon agreement with the relevant team coordinator(s) and with the editors of the project, I could become an author of one or more of the said chapters or subchapters. In such case, my authorship and intellectual property rights will be duly respected, in accordance with common practice within the academic community and with the following statements:

- I guarantee the originality of my chapters and/or sub-chapters;
- I grant to the Max Planck Institute Luxembourg (including its authorized agents working as editors of the Compendium) first publication rights to my chapters or sub-chapters, and agree that they will not be published, in whole or in part, in any other source prior to their publication in the Compendium without the express written permission of Max Planck Institute Luxembourg;
- I grant to the Max Planck Institute Luxembourg a non-exclusive license to publish, reproduce, display, and distribute my chapter or sub-chapters in any language and in any form including, but not limited to, print, electronic, and digital media, microfiche, microfilm, and any form necessary for inclusion in computerized retrieval systems, or any other format;
- I additionally grant to the Max Planck Institute Luxembourg the right to transfer, assign, or sublicense the rights granted herein without limitation;
- I accept that the Max Planck Institute Luxembourg may exercise any rights granted herein directly or by means of third parties, including by authorization of third-party publishers, aggregators, and printers to publish my chapters or subchapters or to include the chapters or sub-chapters in a database or other services such as Westlaw, LEXIS, HeinOnline, JSTOR, and ProQuest.

The expressions “Compendium on Comparative Procedural Law” and “Compendium” are here used as synonyms; they both refer to the final publication that is to be the main output of the CPLJ Project, irrespective of the title that this publication might eventually be given.

(4) I commit myself to maintaining in confidence and not disclosing to third parties any Confidential Information generated or provided under the CPLJ Project, unless the owner of the copyrights over the Confidential Information in question has expressly given his or her permission in writing to make such disclosure. “Confidential Information” is here understood as any information, outline, summary, draft, manuscript, document, output, software or material disclosed by a participant in the CPLJ Project, or appearing in the CPLJ Online Collaborative Platform, which is not published or has not been made public to third parties before or at the time of disclosure, or the confidential nature of which should have been reasonably presumed by the receiving participant.

(5) I commit myself to keep personal data of other CPLJ participants confidential and to abide by the terms of the CPLJ Data Protection Policy, of which I have been duly informed in the separate section below, without prejudice to the rights conferred by Regulation (EU) 2016/679 (General Data Protection Regulation).
